1. INTRODUCTION

PPGE's aim is to offer courses stricto sensu at master's and doctoral level in the field of general economics, both theoretical and applied, in order to improve scientific competence and professional development of its student body and to develop scientific research that contributes to the advancement of knowledge in a critical and pluralistic way, actively participating in the theoretical and applied debate on the main economic themes.

PPGE's Master program is directed to students that hold a bachelor's degree or similar undergraduate degree and who can engage into a full-time academic regime, according to Article 25 of PPGE Regulation. PPGE's PhD program is directed to students with a master's degree and who can engage into a full-time academic regime, according to Article 25 of PPGE Regulation.

The program is organized in three areas of concentration, which aim to bring together the modules offered by the program in articulated sets to better target the training and research work of students. The areas of concentration are: Industry and Innovation; Macroeconomics and Monetary Economics; and Economic and Social Development. The scope of the concentration areas is a basic reference for the assessment of applications and for the definition of the area to which the candidate will be internally bound if he/she is admitted to PPGE.

There are no enrollment or tuition fees. Non-resident candidates should be able to cover their expenses in full. PPGE has funding of Master and PhD scholarships from Brazilian Federal and State Agencies, such as CAPES, CNPq and FAPERJ, which can be allocated to non-resident students if available.
